Point 1: Succession to the Monarchy

Edward the Confessor, King of England, died early in 1066 - without an heir.

No son. Not even a daughter.

When a king died without an heir in medieval times, there was general instability and conflict.

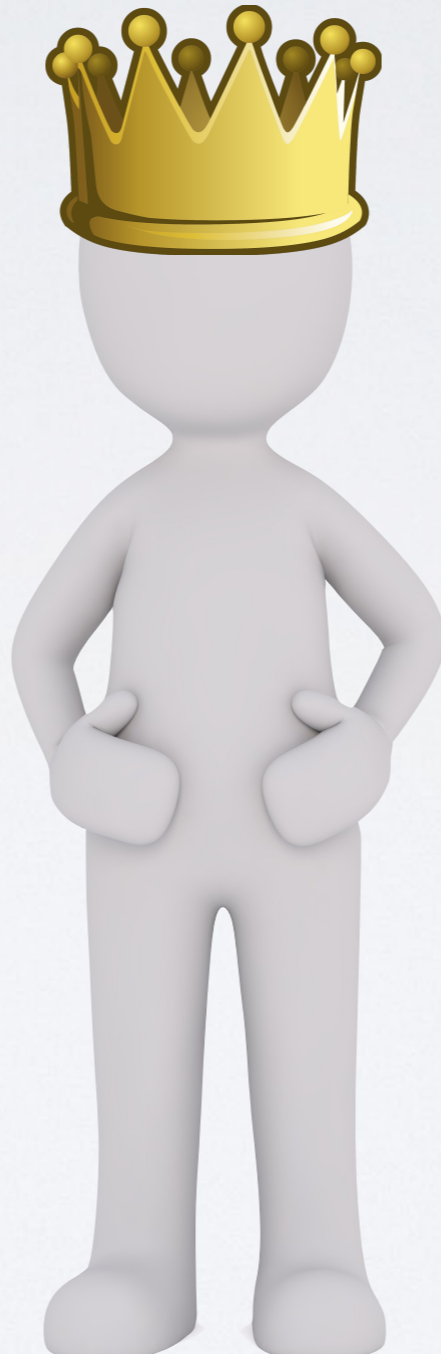

A power struggle was likely to ensue.

Without a clear heir (pronounced “air”), the crown was up for grabs. Three powerful, ambitious men became rivals for it.

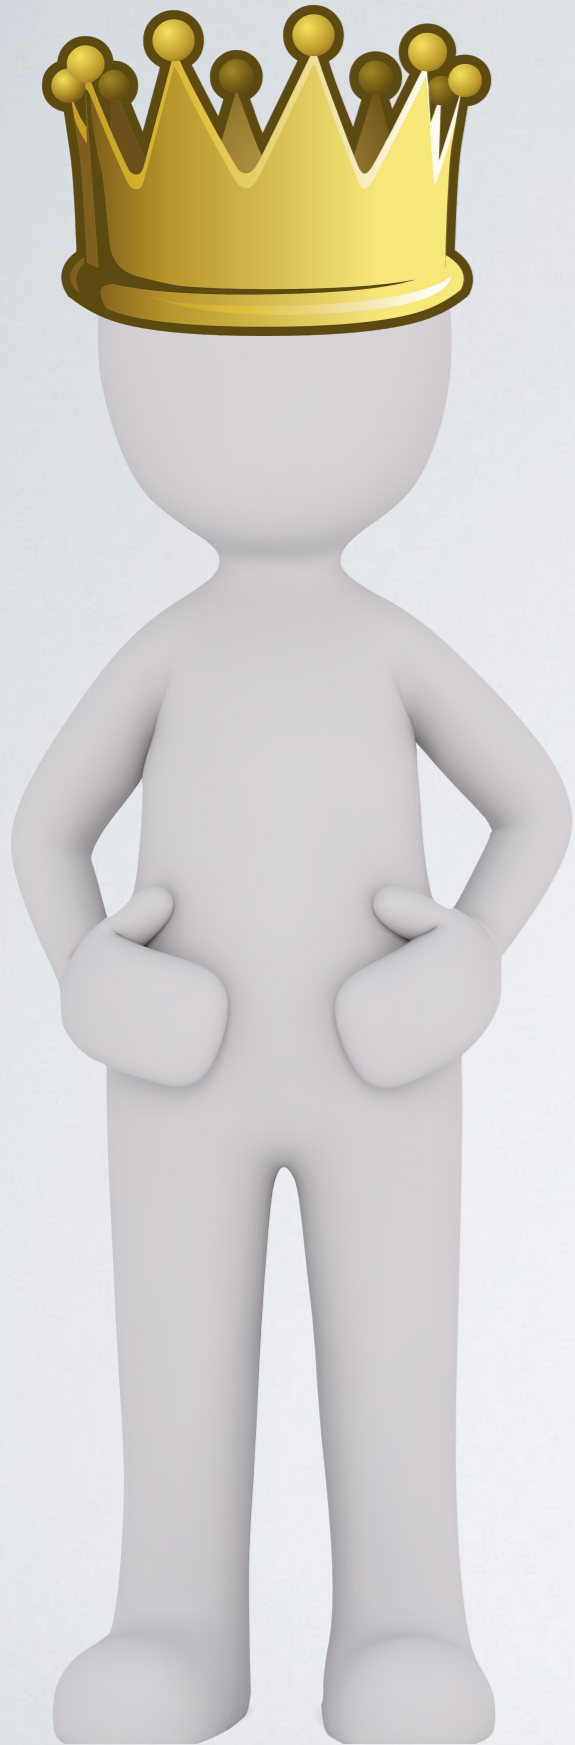

Harald Hardrada

Harold Godwinson

Duke William of Normandy

Rival 1: Harold Godwinson

- Most powerful noble in England
- Disliked by Edward the Confessor
- Claimed that the dying Edward had touched his hand to identify him as heir to the throne
- Was crowned King shortly after Edward's death

Rival 2: William, Duke of Normandy

- Had been friendly with Edward the Confessor
- Claimed that Edward had promised him the throne
- Asserted that Harold Godwinson had sworn allegiance to him and was therefore an oath-breaker

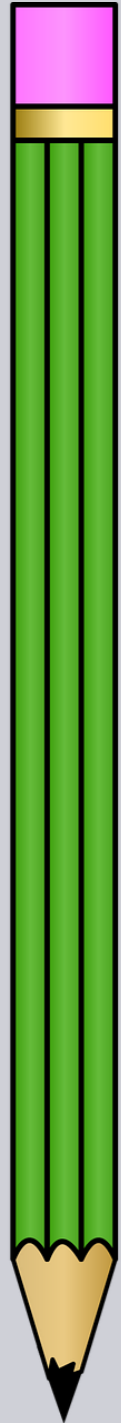

Rival 3: Harald Hardrada

- King of Norway
- Flimsiest claim to the throne
 - Based his claim on being related to a Viking king of England, Canute (or Knut)
- Joined forces with Harold Godwinson's brother Tostig, whom Harold had banished

Quick Fact Check 1

Which detail goes with which claimant to the throne?

- a Referred to (by detractors) as “the Bastard”
- b Most powerful noble in England
- c Related to Canute, former Viking king of England
- d King of Norway
- e Disliked by Edward the Confessor
- f Duke of Normandy
- g Denounced by the Normans as an oath-breaker

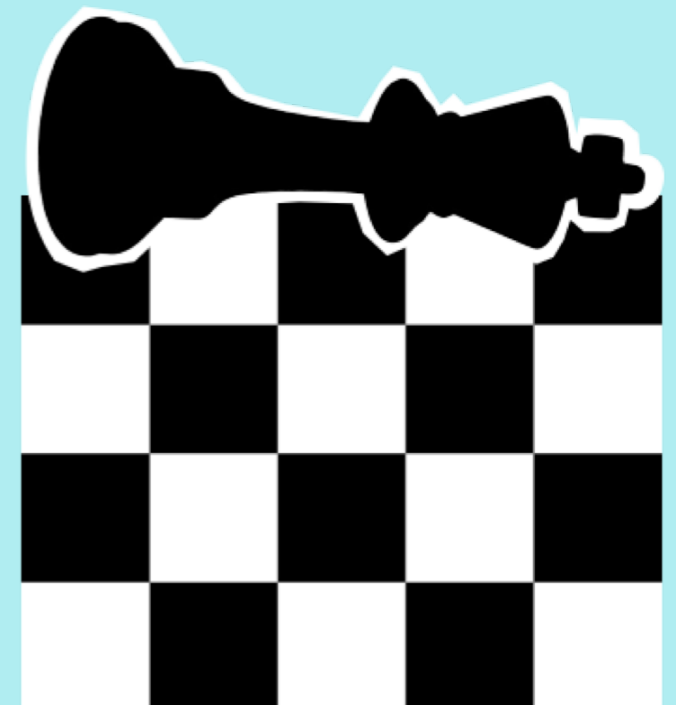

● Harold Godwinson ● William
● Harald Hardrada

Advantages and Disadvantages

advantage - plus, positive, benefit, good point disadvantage - minus, negative, downside, drawback

Which points below are genuine advantages of a clearly defined succession to the throne? Find 3.

- a Reduced likelihood of violent conflict
- b Greater social equality
- c Ensures a high-quality monarch
- d Greater political stability
- e Power struggles less likely to take place
- f Easier for people with a flimsy claim to usurp the throne

Point 2: Disputes were resolved through violence and blood-letting. Diplomatic solutions were not typical.

In this situation, the three rivals didn't discuss matters or send ambassadors and emissaries in order to avoid unnecessary violence. Rather, they prepared their armies for battle.

Harald Hardrada

Harold Godwinson

Duke William of Normandy

Serious Preparations 1

Harald Hardrada
brought up to 300 ships
and an estimated
10,000 men to England.

Serious Preparations 2

William of Normandy brought at least 700 ships, about 7,000 men and 2,000 horses.

Battle of Fulford - Harald Hardraada and Tostig are victors. (20 September)

Battle of Stamford Bridge - Harald Hardraada and Tostig suffer a devastating defeat. Both are killed.
(25 September)

William crowned, 25 December 1066

Battle of Hastings on 14 October. William's army triumphs.

William lands here on 28 September.

Quick Fact Check 2

Which detail goes with which claimant to the throne?

- a Victor at the Battle of Fulford
- b Brought 2000 horses across the Channel
- c Only 25 of his ships returned to Norway
- d Victor at the Battle of Stamford Bridge
- e Triumphed at the Battle of Hastings
- f Died at the Battle of Hastings
- g Crowned King on Christmas Day, 1066
- h Later nicknamed “the Conqueror”

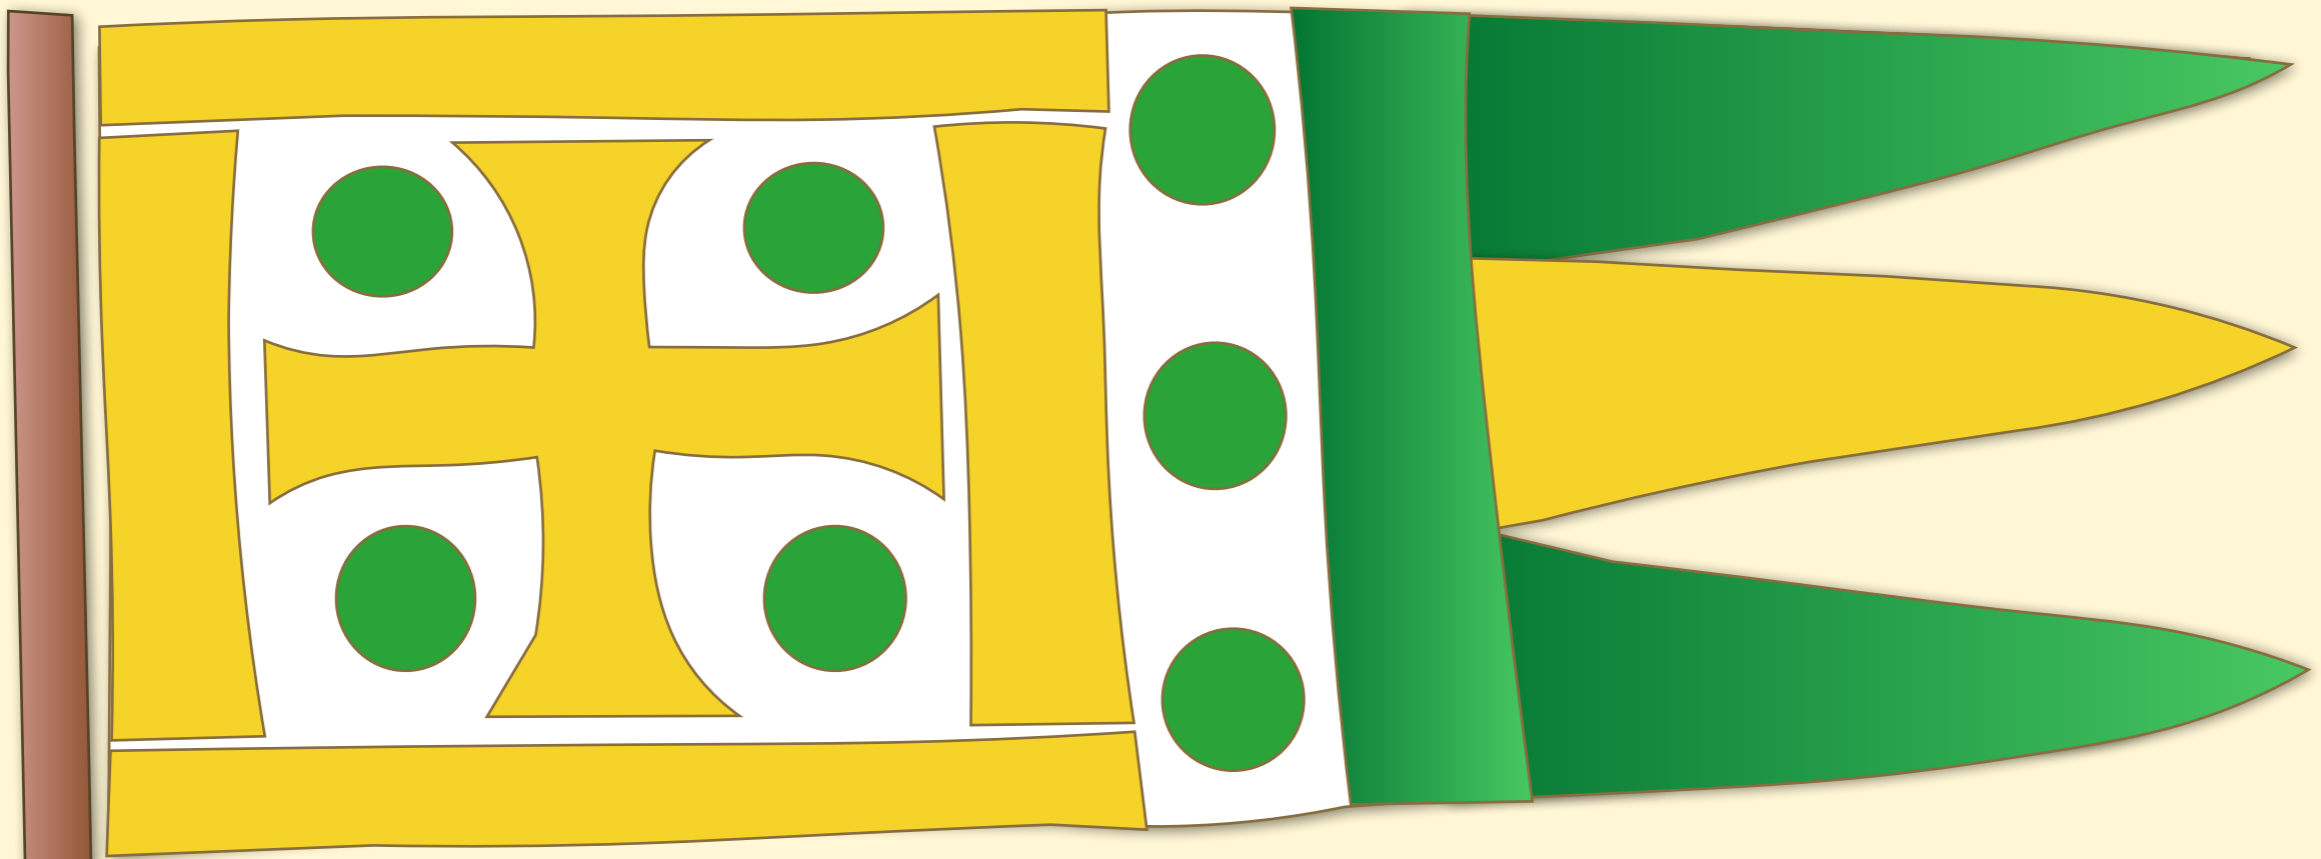

• Harold Godwinson • William, Duke of Normandy
• Harald Hardrada, King of Norway

Point 3: God was presumed to be a factor in who gained power.

If someone became king or won an important battle, this was often presented by the victor or viewed by the people as a sign of God's will.

For this reason, William Duke of Normandy gained the Pope's support. He was given a papal banner to show that he was supposedly fighting a "holy war". Although this was absurd, it was powerful medieval propaganda.

Point 4: After winning a battle, the victor wanted to secure his victory by subjugating the people.

William employed (at least) three strategies in order to achieve this:

- crushing rebellions

- building strategically placed castles

- data collection

Strategy 1: Crushing Rebellion

William the Conqueror violently put down rebellions in the north of England. He and his knights destroyed all in their path, burning crops and causing lasting famine. Tens of thousands are believed to have died.

Strategy 2: Castles and Surveillance

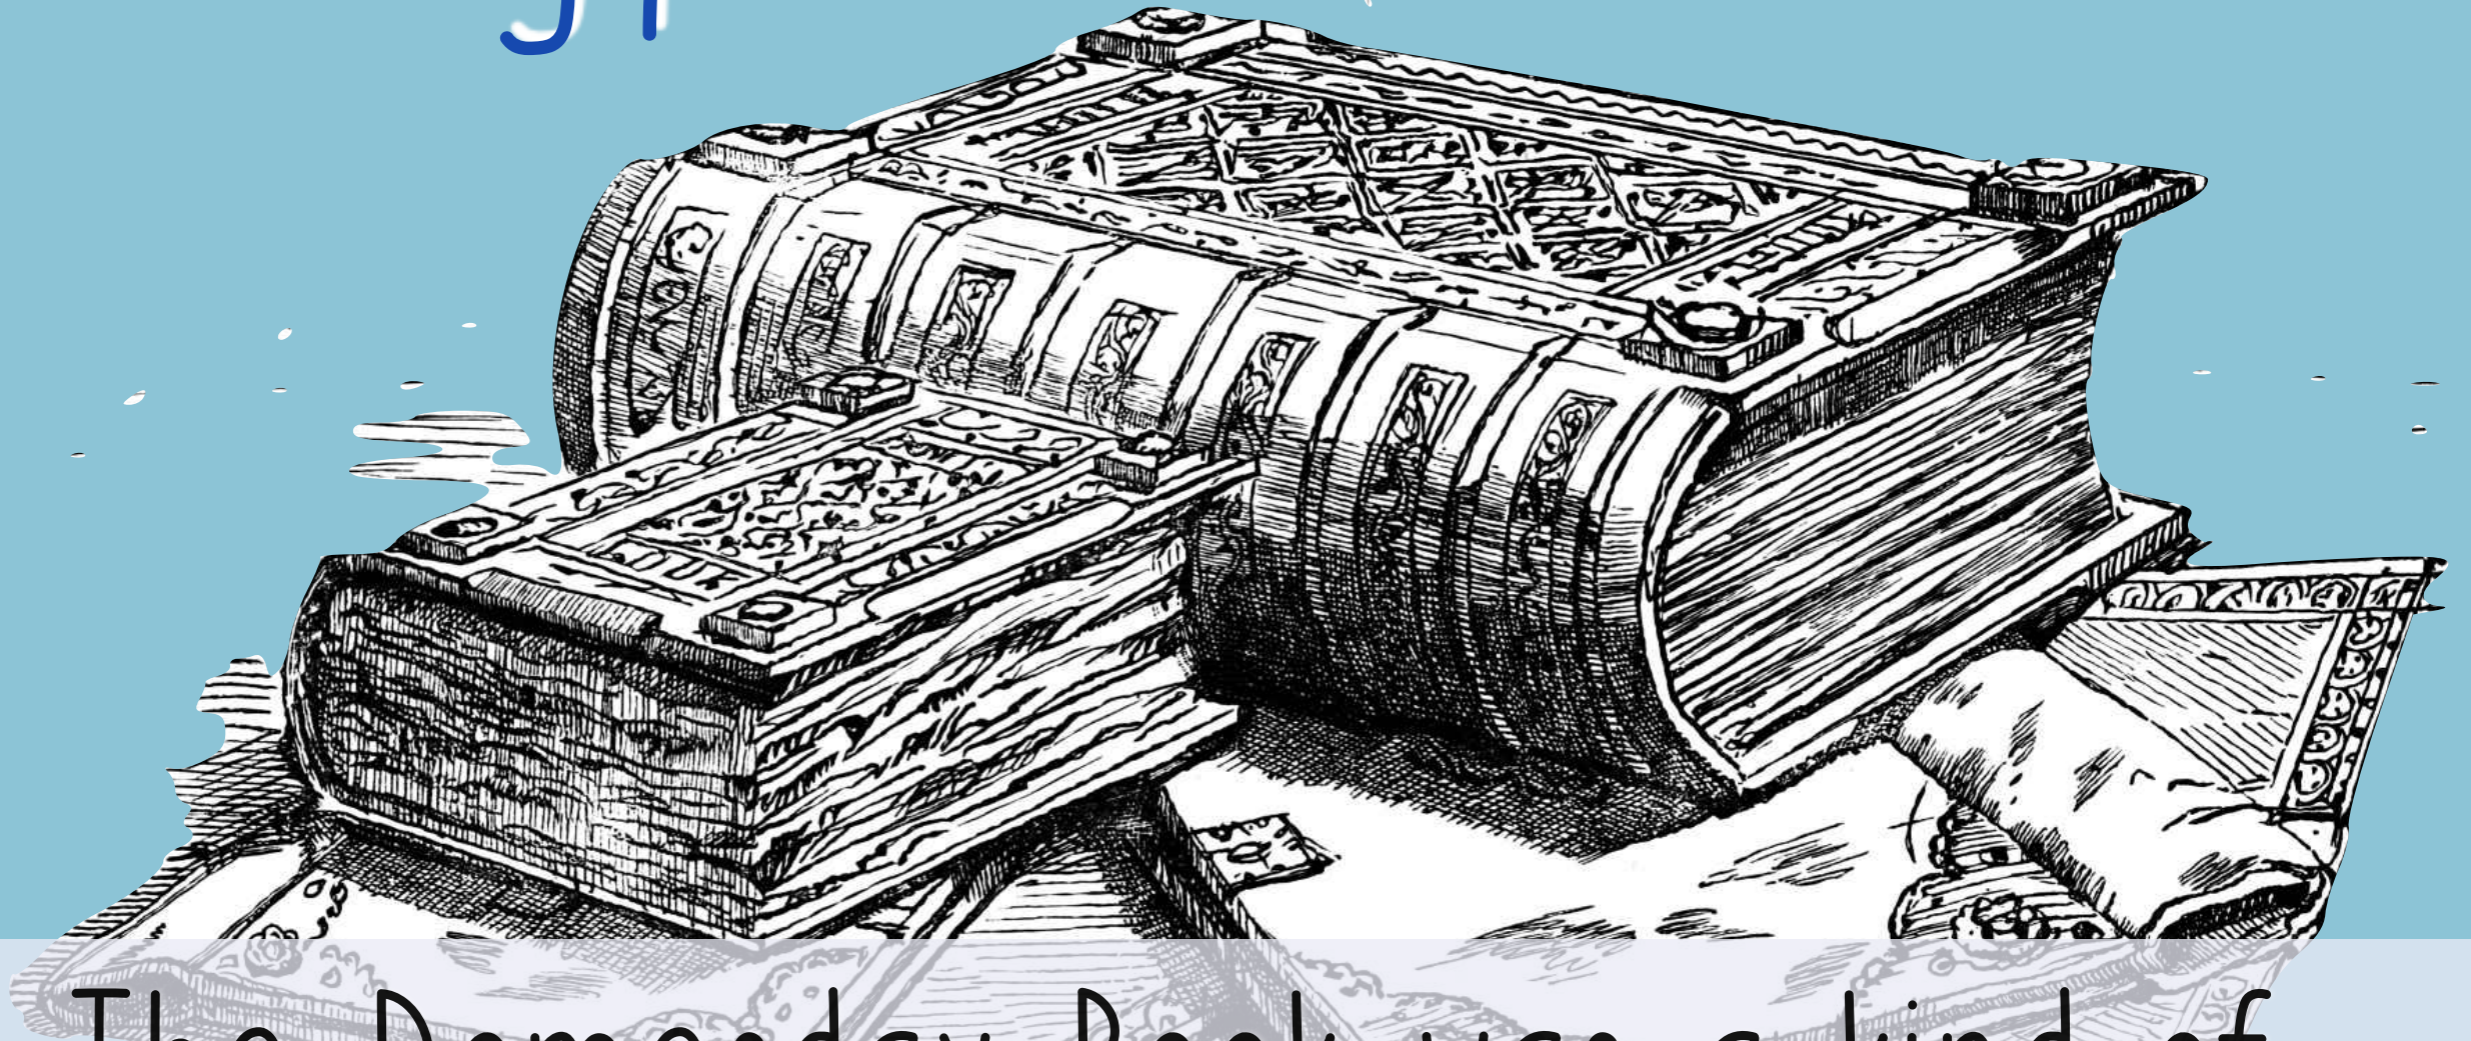

Motte and Bailey Castle

Stone Keep at York

The first castles were motte and bailey castles, relatively quick to build but harder to defend than the later stone castles.

Strategy 3: Data Collection

The Domesday Book was a kind of medieval database that ensured the new King knew what was happening in his kingdom and could tax his subjects.

Quick Fact Check 3

Which explanation (a-g) matches each element in the motte?

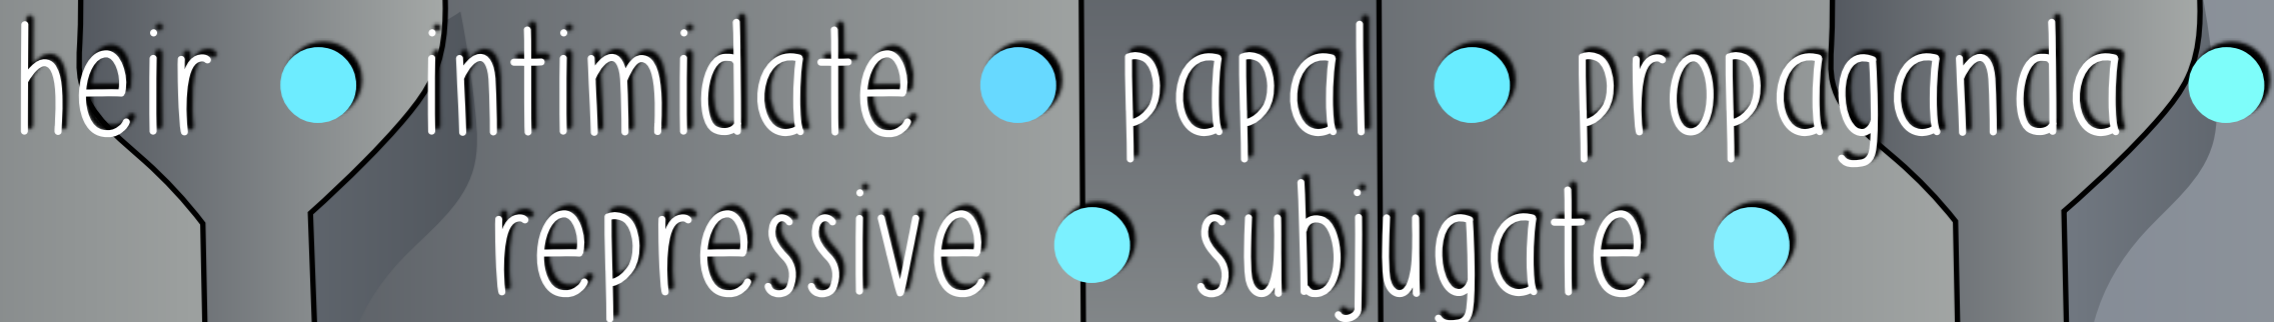

- a Widespread food scarcity
- b Ideal for surveillance and intimidation
- c An act of political and religious propaganda
- d Easiest type of castle to build
- e A kind of medieval database
- f Type of castle that requires more time to build, but is easier to defend
- g A method for subjugating people and eliminating dissent castles generally ● crushing rebellions ● famine ● Domesday Book ● gaining the Pope's support and banner ● motte and bailey castles ● stone castles

Quick Vocabulary Check 3

Place each word below in the appropriate sentence.

- a Building castles in his conquered territory allowed William I to keep people under surveillance and so _____ them.
- b Crushing rebellions and burning crops were cruel and _____ measures through which he planned to _____ rebels and others.
- c When a king dies without an _____, uncertainty over the succession can lead to conflict.
- d By fighting with a _____ banner to show the Pope's support, William exercised a form of powerful medieval _____.

heir • intimidate • papal • propaganda •
repressive • subjugate •

Point 5:

The victor tells the story and places himself in a positive light.

According to one estimation, William the Conqueror and his knights were responsible for the deaths of 100,000 people.

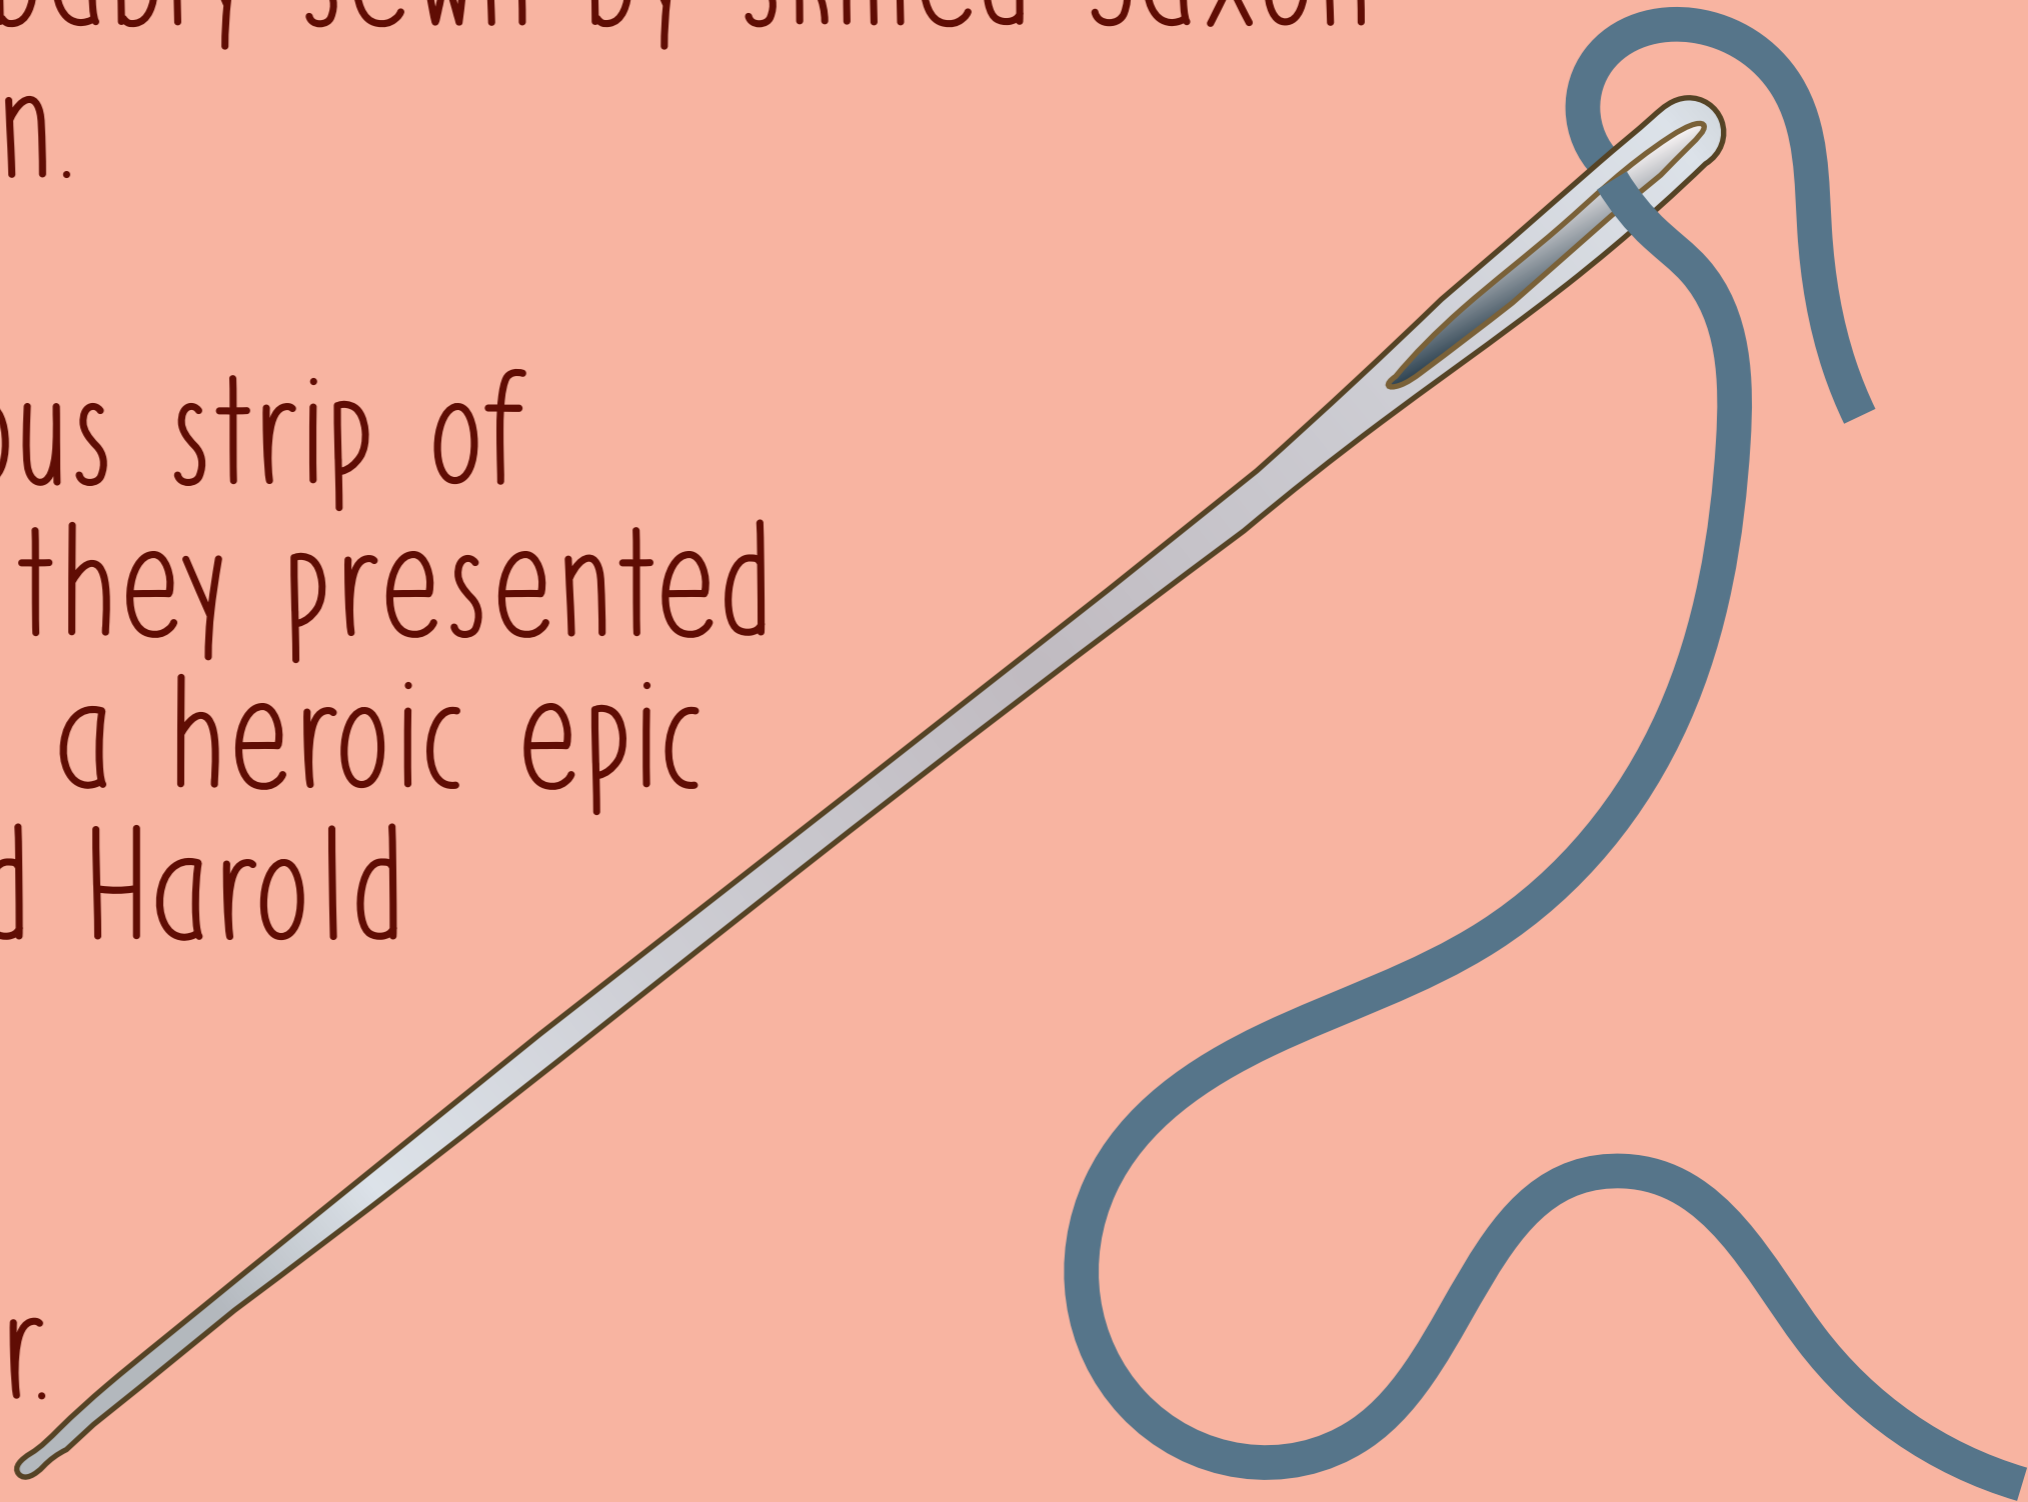

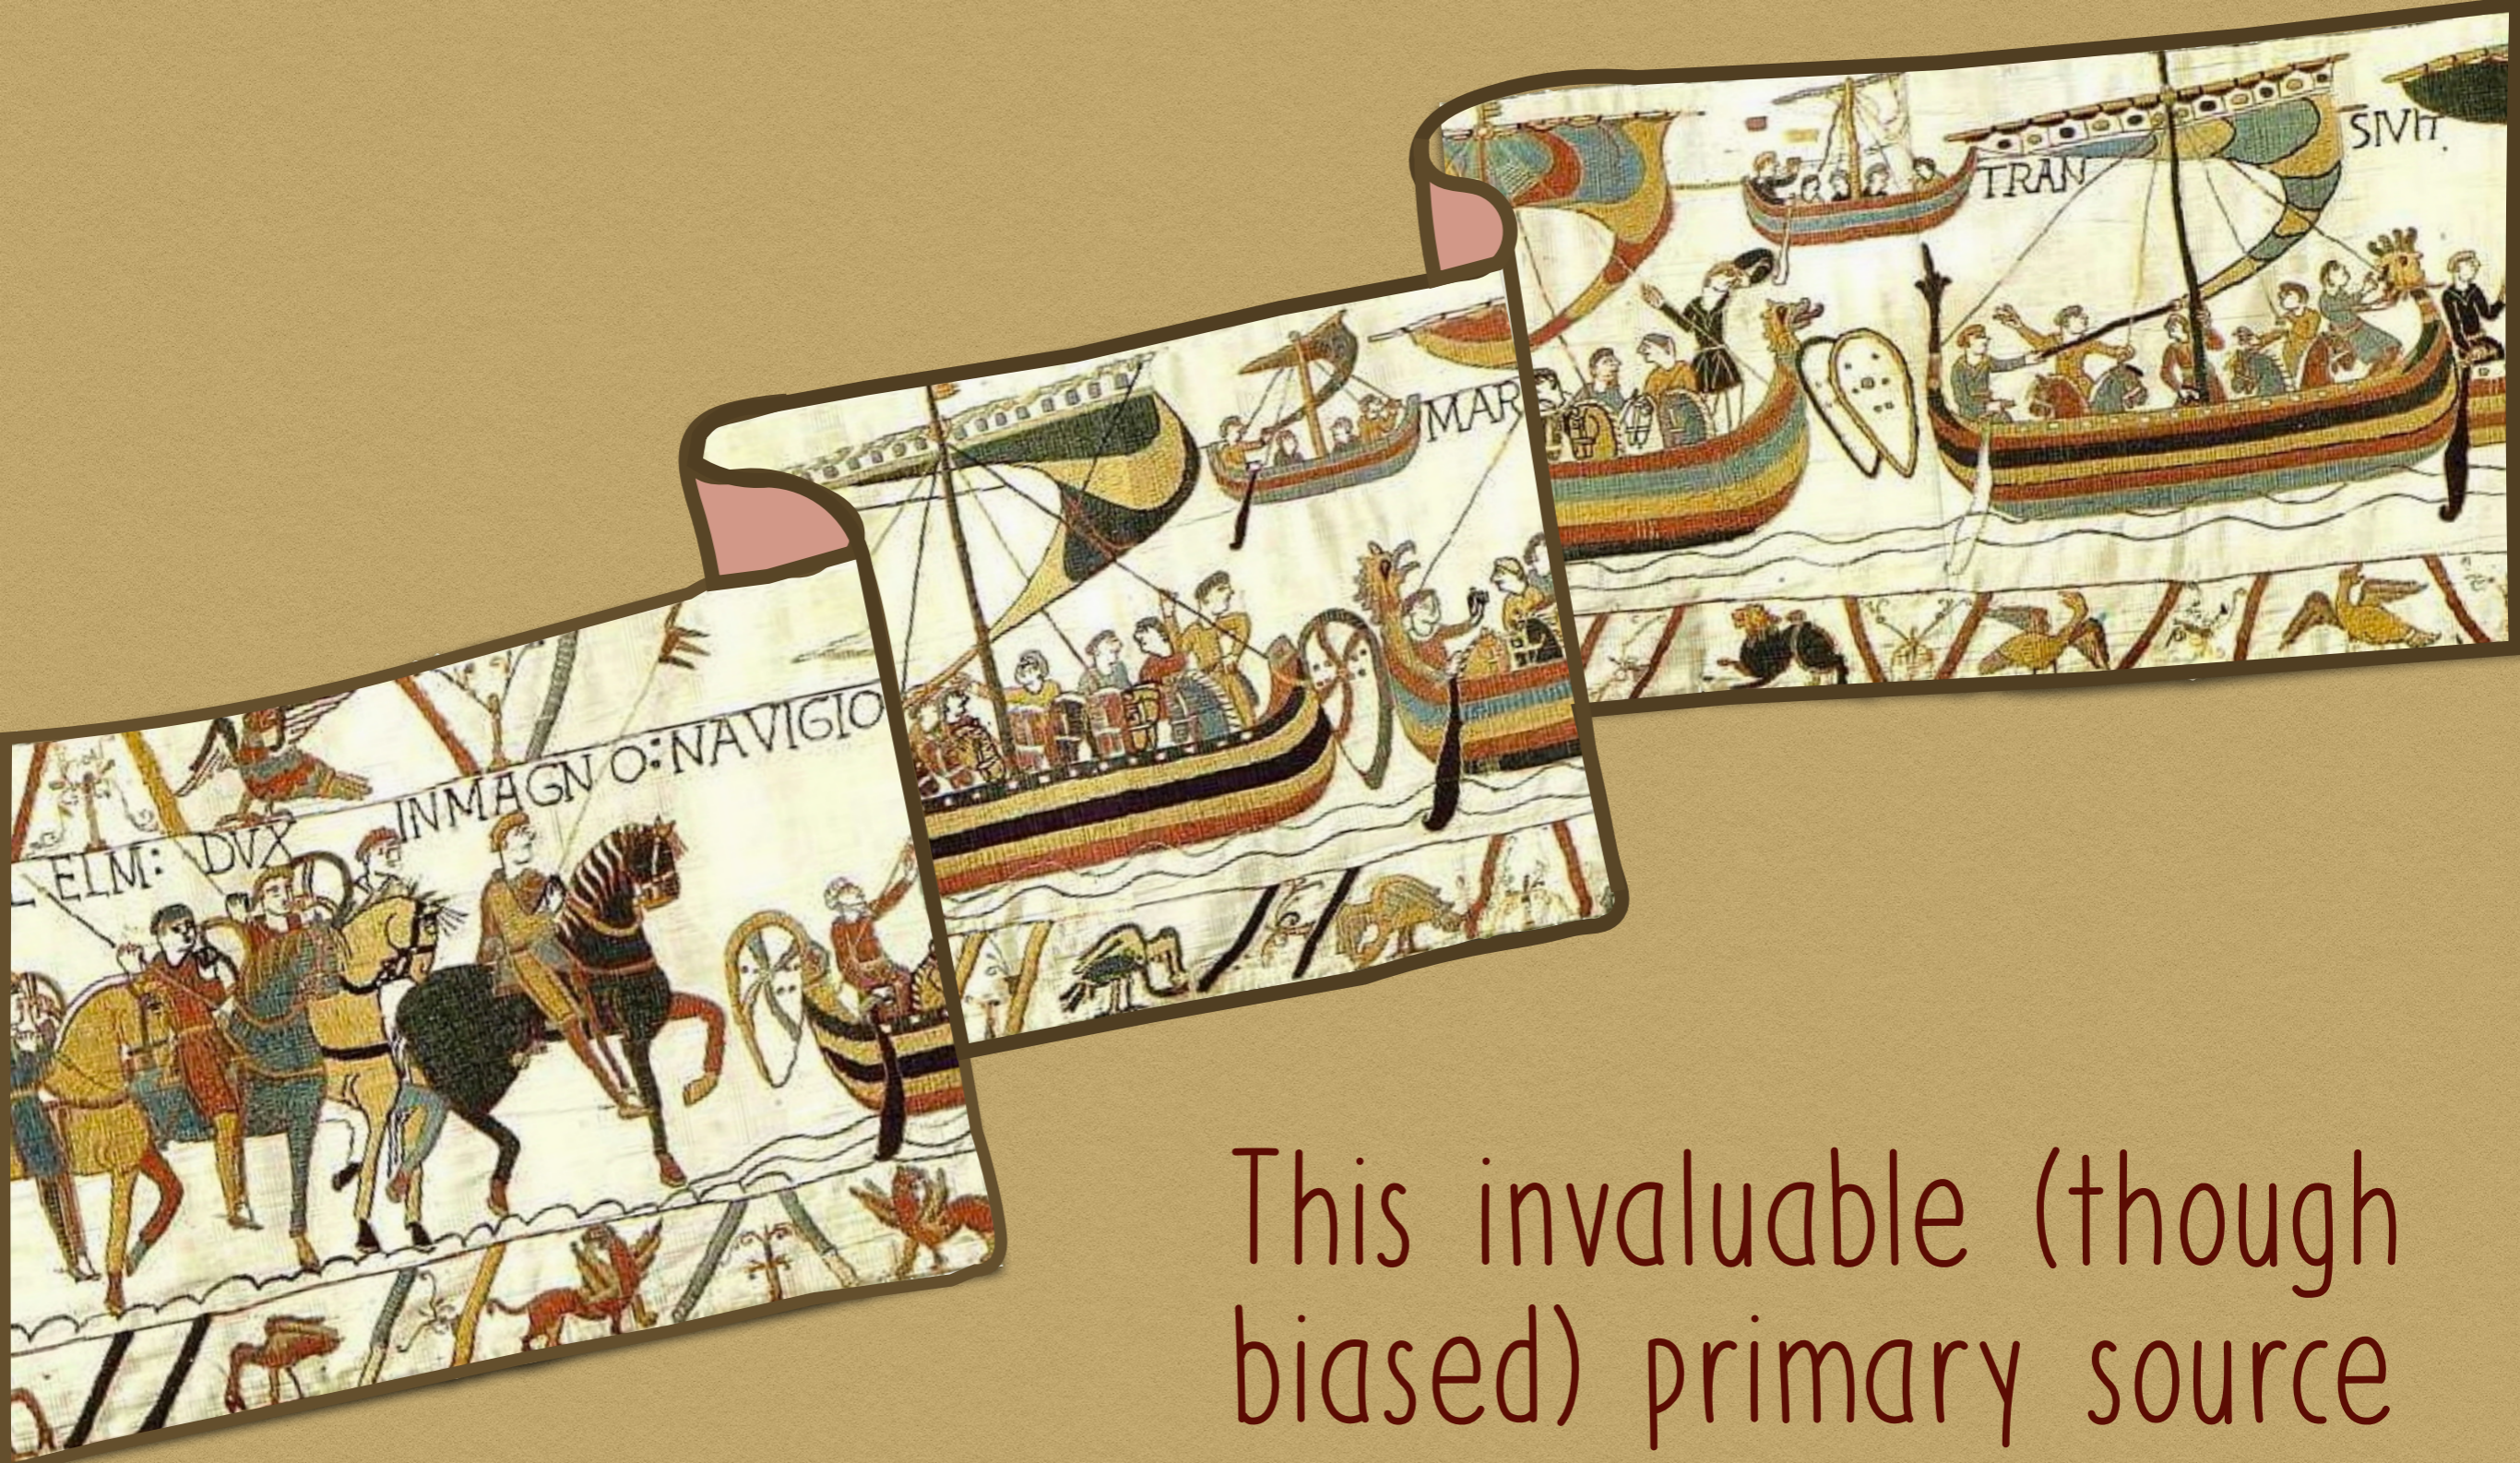

By any reckoning, that is a cruel and horrific legacy. Yet since William won the Battle of Hastings, he had every opportunity to make his invasion seem just and legitimate.

For example, the Normans commissioned a 70-metre long embroidery of their exploits, probably sewn by skilled Saxon needlewomen.

In this famous strip of propaganda, they presented the story as a heroic epic and depicted Harold Godwinson as an oath-breaker.

This invaluable (though biased) primary source came to be known as the Bayeux Tapestry.

The Normans go to battle

Harold is killed
by an arrow

Think it over...

1 The designers of the tapestry hoped to present...

☐ a the Norman view of events. ☐ b the Saxon view of events.

2 Harold Godwinson is therefore depicted as...

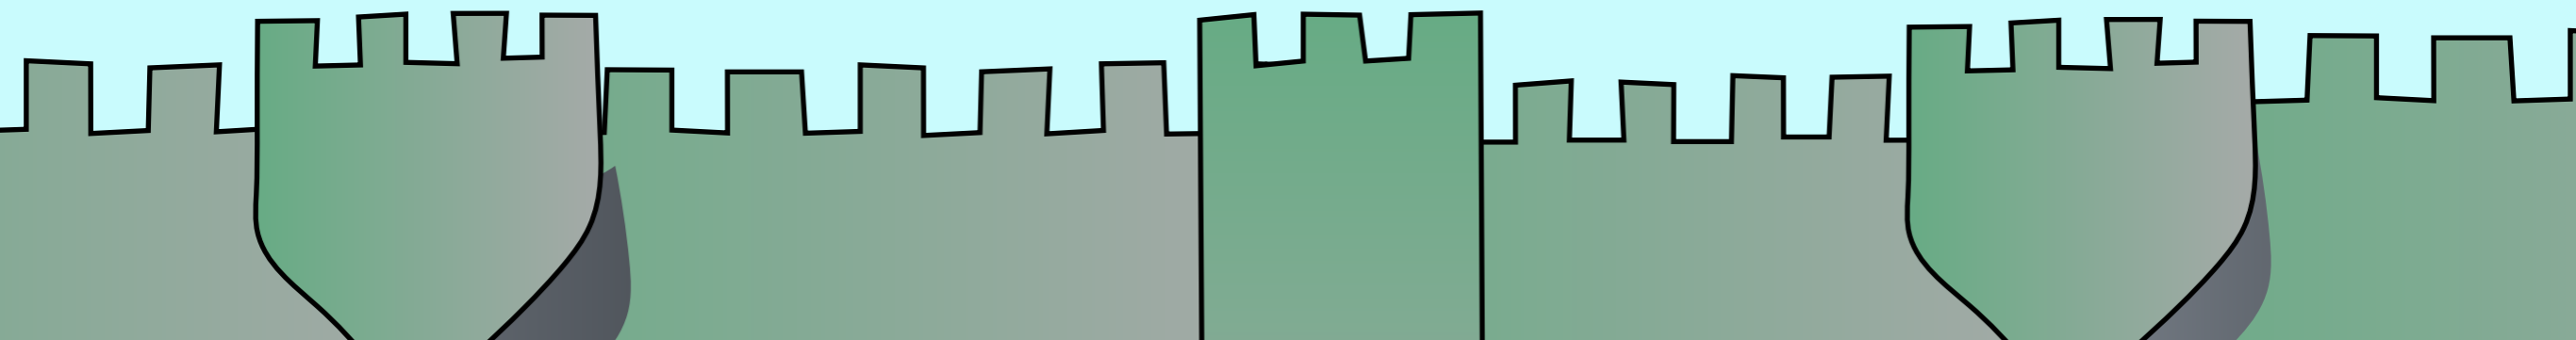

☐ a the rightful King of England. ☐ b an oath-breaker who deserved to be overthrown.

3 William I of England is consequently represented as...

☐ a a righteous hero. ☐ b a brutal usurper.

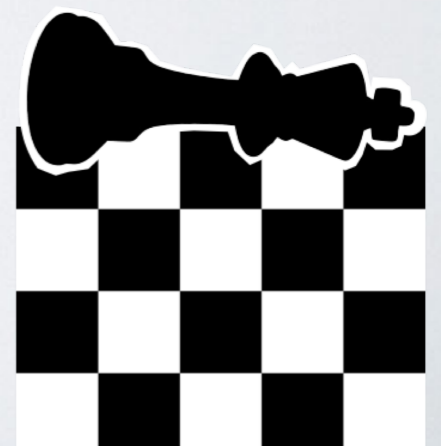

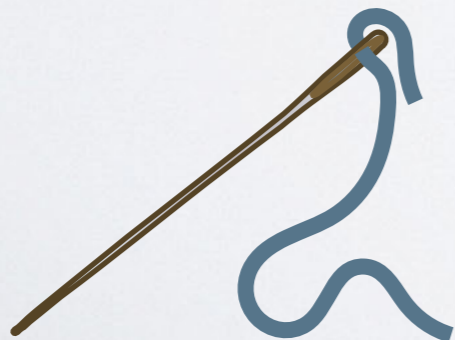

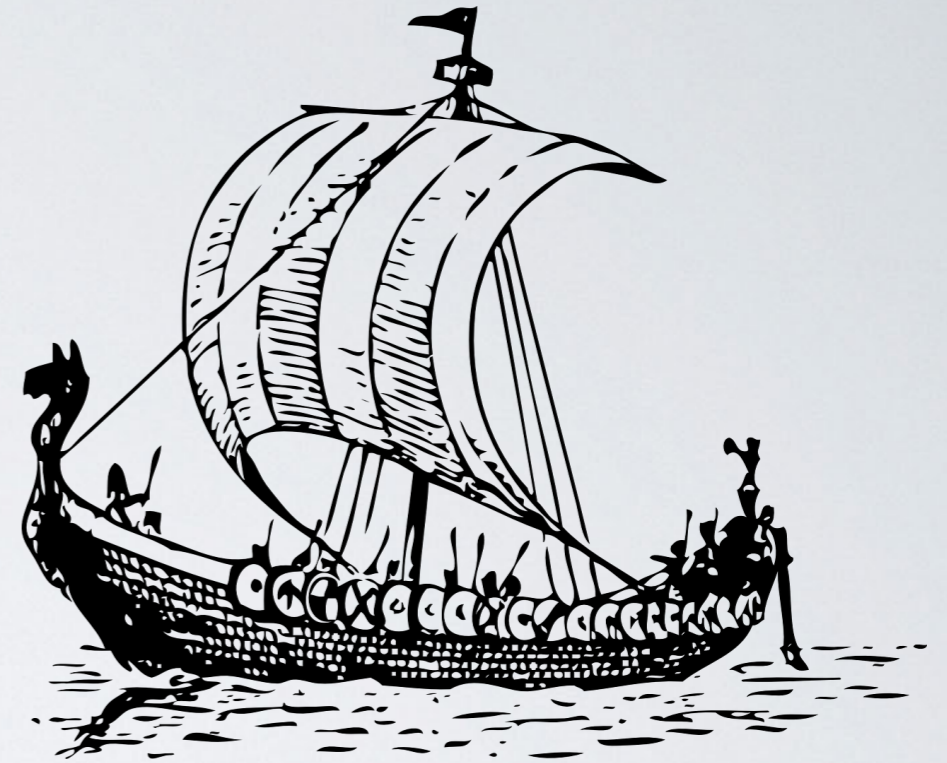

4 The actions of the Normans are therefore characterised as...

☐ a cruel and oppressive. ☐ b brave and irreproachable.
